1. The first step in the process of the formation of the State is the creation of a common identity among the people. This is achieved through the establishment of a common language, a common religion, and a common culture. The process of the formation of the State is a long and complex one, and it is not always clear when it is complete. However, the first step is the most important, and it is the one that is most often neglected. Without a common identity, the people cannot form a State, and the State cannot function properly. The second step is the establishment of a common government. This is achieved through the election of a common ruler, and the establishment of a common law. The third step is the establishment of a common territory. This is achieved through the acquisition of land, and the establishment of a common border. The fourth step is the establishment of a common economy. This is achieved through the establishment of a common currency, and the establishment of a common market. The fifth step is the establishment of a common defense. This is achieved through the establishment of a common army, and the establishment of a common navy. The sixth step is the establishment of a common foreign policy. This is achieved through the establishment of a common diplomatic corps, and the establishment of a common foreign minister. The seventh step is the establishment of a common social system. This is achieved through the establishment of a common education system, and the establishment of a common health system. The eighth step is the establishment of a common legal system. This is achieved through the establishment of a common court system, and the establishment of a common law system. The ninth step is the establishment of a common administrative system. This is achieved through the establishment of a common bureaucracy, and the establishment of a common police system. The tenth step is the establishment of a common cultural system. This is achieved through the establishment of a common language system, and the establishment of a common religion system. The process of the formation of the State is a long and complex one, and it is not always clear when it is complete. However, the first step is the most important, and it is the one that is most often neglected. Without a common identity, the people cannot form a State, and the State cannot function properly.
